

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A split stream method for processing tomatoes. The benefits of split stream processing can be more fully realized when the split streams are recombined under specific processing conditions. In particular, under specified conditions of shear and heat, the potential viscosity of the thick stream is fully harvested. The amount of shear used in accordance with the invention is significantly greater than the amount required to reconstitute at least some prior pastes.